

Sumpfchrüeg (Heliacolura)

Veit Laurent Kurz

After the S.O.A.P.Y (Servants Order ov Ancient Psychik Youth) initiation at New Old Bridge, one of the Alcemydds was hounded southwards, separated from the rest of the group, driven by his affectuous and manic mental states.

The magosh of the south, with their dark sniggers called for him. On his journey, he contemplated the fferming cults of Hessia and Underbavaria and their mesolithic phylogeny. The swamps of Hessia revealed to his piercing sight what appeared to be the remains of an ol'grain barn built of granite. On the various sample boards and soil probes that were found in his inheritance, he referred to the stone complex as 'Megaya'.

The Alcemydd's investigation of the site also shed light on its nemesis though, its constructors were digested and absorbed by an unknown species of moss, it corroded its host's innards by infecting the granary and seeds they cultivated, eating them slowly inside out. Instead of changing their fferming habits or resettling their agronomic cult, they took the mischief as the will of ta higher entity.

The exahibit envisioned by the Alcemydd and his slaves consists of three botanically infested batches on canwa and a miniature of the Hessian excavation site.
